

HIGHEST PRICE PAID FOR LAMBS

Heber Man Gets Top Notch for Shipments to Kansas City.

BEST SINCE YEAR OF 1906

RANGE CONDITIONS GOOD—NO WOOL ACTIVITY—DISEASE.

Never were conditions generally in Utah better for the sheepmen of the state. Lambs are in the best condition, and the shipping season is now on in full force, many lambs being shipped to Kansas City and other points, and bringing prices that have not been realized since in the fall of 1906.

Probably the best price that has been received in Utah for lambs was the price reported on a shipment of 1,164 lambs by J. S. Murdock last week from Heber City to Kansas City. These lambs averaged in weight sixty-nine pounds, and brought $7.50. That, it was reported, was the highest price paid for lambs in Kansas City to anyone since Sept. 11, 1906.

Shipping is now being made of lambs from all parts of Utah, but especially from the Heber City district. While the high prices for lambs now reach the 1906 prices, the prices for wethers and ewes still remain somewhat under the prices of that year.

Reports from sheepmen recently interviewed are to the effect that the ranges are all good and especially so in the southern part of the state. The winter range in the northwest part of the state is reported not quite so good as last year on account of the excessive heat this summer.

The Lip Disease.

Speaking of the lip and lip disease, and which so much has been said of late, an old sheepman yesterday said that the disease was by no means new in Utah—that it had been known ever since the sheep industry was started here. He said it was not really a disease, and that entirely too much stress had been put upon it. Old sheepmen know all about it, and have known about it for years. He said:

"The lip and lip disease is nothing more or less than a sore mouth on young sheep. It is never found on old sheep. It is caused by taking the lambs away from the ewes when they are too young, before their gums are hardened. Denied the sustenance of their mother's milk, the tender lambs have to begin rustling for a living. They eat hardened food and their gums get sore."

"In Utah and in parts of Idaho there is a green, mossy-kind of a bush that is something like the prickly pear, and which the sheep are very fond of. This especially makes their tender mouths sore. Another food which the lambs seek with particular relish is a bush commonly called the 'shad scale.' That also has minute thorns on it."

"Lambs placed on green, tender food never acquire the disease. It is nothing at all alarming, and the lambs quickly recover when taken away from the kind of food which causes the soreness, or as soon as their gums have become hardened."

No Wool Activity.

A. S. Erickson, representative here for the B. Harris Wool company of St. Louis, which company last season bought about two-thirds of the Utah crop, and who naturally is pretty well posted on the wool conditions, was asked yesterday if there were any advances being made by buyers for next season's crop.

He said he had heard reports that a few buyers had been in Idaho offering to contract for next season's wool at similar prices to those paid this season, but he doubted it. He thought it was a rumor started by the sheepmen. "There is no activity in wool now," he said. "There are no buyers in the west that I know anything about, except those who, like myself, are here all the year around. No contracts so far as I know have been made for next season's crop in Utah."

CASE DISMISSED BY STIPULATION

Settlement Effected in Suit to Break the Will of Mrs. Sarah Everard.

In Judge George G. Armstrong's division of the Third district court yesterday the suit of Alonzo Davis against President Joseph F. Smith and others of the Mormon church to break the will of Mrs. Sarah Everard, was dismissed by stipulation, a settlement having been made by attorneys on either side of the case. Mrs. Everard died in London on April 24, 1906, leaving an estate valued at $46,761.57 in Salt Lake, and $20,000 in London. After debts had been paid and claims of the heirs satisfied—according to the will—there was approximately $30,000 left, which, by the will, was bequeathed as follows:

"And all my residue as an endowment for the Salt Lake temple, to be expended in such manner as Joseph F. Smith determines."

The filing of the suit in the district court followed close upon the heels of the dismissal of a similar suit in the federal court, which was brought by William Edwards, Alonzo Davis, who filed the suit in the district court, which was dismissed yesterday, is a nephew of Edwards and guardian of Edward Davis, one of the beneficiaries in the will of Mrs. Everard. It was directed against President Joseph F. Smith, Henry H. Blood and Joseph W. McMurrin, named by Mrs. Everard as executors of her will, and Apostle Brigham H. Roberts, C. W. Penrose, George A. Smith, Orson F. Whitney and John H. Smith, George F. Gibbs and James Jack.

It was claimed that a bequest could not be made to the temple, and on these grounds they sought to break the will. What settlement was made is not known, but it is likely a part of the $30,000 was turned over to Alonzo Davis to end the suit.

HISTORIC HOUSE IS TO BE RAZED

Orson Pratt's Astronomical Observatory, Built in 1869, Comes Down.

Work will soon be commenced on the raising of the old adobe building in temple square, which served as an astronomical observatory for Orson Pratt, a church writer and one of the greatest mathematicians of the early west. The decision to raze this old landmark has only been arrived at by the Mormon church authorities after considerable deliberation.

The building has been a point of interest ever since 1869, the year in which it was built. It was used to house the astronomical instruments that were loaned by the general government to the Mormon church for the purpose of making observations. Orson Pratt was given charge and located the Salt Lake meridian, from which point all surveys in this state are computed.

The red sandstone block at the southeast corner of the temple square marks the exact point where the meridian passes, with a north latitude of 40 degrees 46 minutes 4 seconds, and west longitude of 111 degrees 53 minutes 47 seconds. The instruments were also used for scientific study and for determining the correct time for Salt Lake and surrounding cities.

Dismantling Now.

Frank J. Winkle, United States examiner of surveys of the office of the surveyor general for Utah, assisted by Howard Miller and Andrew Nelson, connected with the same office, is busy dismantling and cleaning the delicate instruments. Mr. Winkle states the instruments are of specially fine workmanship and are even more accurate than those that are manufactured by machinery at this day.

"The instruments are in a splendid state of preservation," said he. "Not even a screw is missing. They will be thoroughly cleaned and overhauled and will then be loaned by the government to the presiding bishop of the Mormon church to be placed in the Deseret historical museum, which will have its home in the Vermont building."

The red sandstone pedestal on which the instruments were placed will also be transferred to the museum.

FUTURE PLANS OF SON OF HARRIMAN

Young Man Will Take Up Railroading From the Very Bottom.

New York, Sept. 15.—Walter Averill Harriman, the eldest son of the dead railway king, today, at 17 years of age, finds himself confronted with the absolute necessity of preparing to master the intricacies of railroading in order that a few years hence he may step in and seize the reins of management that death took from the well-trained hands of his father.

Although the young man to whom will eventually fall the management of the billion dollar interests of his father is well educated and knows something of railroading, he readily admits that he is at present incapable of the management of the gigantic system of roads his father built up and that he must learn the railroad business thoroughly before he attempts to direct them.

Realizing, with characteristic keenness of perception, that his days of activity were drawing to a speedy close, and that it would be necessary for his old son to prepare to shoulder the burdens death would place in him, Mr. Harriman some months ago started the boy off on a career of railroading, sending him west first, to aid the survivors and later to enter the shops and then to run a locomotive. Mr. Harriman had planned to have his son work in each branch until he reached the top.

He had hoped that his ocean to ocean railroad route would be carried through and improved by Walter, and his plans for a great system circling the entire nation put in realization.

Walter Harriman has many of the characteristics of his father. He is not boastful, he is thoughtful, not talkative, and a good listener. He is remarkably decisive, much as his father was. He makes up his mind quickly and acts accordingly. He does not revel in the luxury that some might think his fortune would lead him into. He thinks no more of riding in the ordinary passenger coach or smoker of a railroad than the hardened commuter does.

Now that young Harriman is face to face with the business affairs of his father, he contemplates plunging into the science of railroading as soon as the sorrow of his bereavement loses its intensity.

LOST

I lost my gold watch and chain at Saltair Labor day. The party who found it, no doubt, has been wondering to whom it belongs. Parties 'earning of the loss felt that it was lost for good; that the party who found it would keep it, but everybody knows I have been advertising for years that red streaks of honesty exist in everybody, and here is another chance to prove it. When the right party reads this advertisement I am satisfied the watch will be returned to me. I will reward the person for so doing, but the fact that I am offering a reward is no reflection on the integrity of the finder. The finder could not return the watch until it was known to whom it belonged.
